Knodium is dedicated to making online collaborative study effortless. It is a platform that allows students and academic staff to learn and share information in a safe, online environment that is available 24/7, 365 days a year.

The Knodium team believe that learning works best using discussion as well as books. Instead of just trying to replicate group work online, they aim to enable online study and discussions that are genuinely useful.

Knodium claims to give students the tool they have been waiting for, seamlessly bridging the gap between the real and virtual learning environments.

The organisation has been around since early 2012, and in that time has collaborated with hundreds of students and lecturers.

Knodium has been packed with features that are designed to keep things simple. The intelligent posting system also organises discussions and hubs to deliver the right information when it is needed.

Knodium also has new features in the pipeline and is still working with students and lecturers to make group study easier.
